Of the railroads coming into Richmond the Chesapeake and Ohio appears to have been the only one that has been injured by the late storm and the high water. On Saturday all of the damage which the Chesapeake and Ohio railway had sustained between Richmond and Hinton had been fully repaired and trains were running on their usual time. One or two slides remained to be cleared away west of Hinton, and with that work accomplished the entire line between Richmond and Huntington will be opened, and the regular running of trains resumed. Dear Dispatch: Being an eye-witness we determined to give Mr. Chase a hearty of the terrible whirlwind that swept known artist for his strong technical work, but I shall attempt only a sketch, for I find was the arrangement committee. We prorequested me to give a description of it;

About 4 o'clock P. M. there was a very heavy shower of rain; the drops were large, and fell thick and fast; but suddenly, in a breath, it stopped, and, as I remarked on its sudden stopping, I heard a sound like distant but continued thunder, or, to describe more accurately, like a great boiling in the air. I went to the window and saw approaching, at the rate of about a mile in two minutes, a fearful whirlwind. Its about 100 yards, in form round, and appeared like a dark, rolling cloud, so black that nothing could be discerned for some ing, boiling, twisting motion of the air. It seemed determined to tear everything in its course from the face of the earth. Houses were snatched up, trees twisted off, and all manner of vegetation mingled with muddy earth in the awful whirl, until they seemed

It was a grand but fearful sight. Portions of houses and branches of trees were carried for miles. From my windows I do not consider it worthy of note. The course destroyed. As soon as it passed I mounted my horse and rode as quickly as I could to give my assistance. Mrs. Carter and her four little ones were alone. Her cries could be distinctly heard. She fell some yards from the house with two little ones in her arms. One lay at her feet apparently dead; but the injuries were slight, save to little Hassie. For her I had scarcely a hope. When I think of the storm in its might its fearful destruction seems small. I can only wonder so little was done.
